Fire Risk Assessments

Fire Risk Assessments

Under the Regulatory Reform (Fire Safety) Order 2005, all non-domestic premises need to have an adequate, up-to-date fire risk assessment. Without one, you do not only endanger people's lives, you face possible prosecution, and the kinds of fines and reputational damage that could prove fatal to your business, too.

Different types of premises have different guidelines for fire safety standards. Our specialist consultants can carry out fire risk assessments and compile cost-effective, legally compliant risk reduction strategies for all commercial and public premises, including factories, warehouses, offices, workshops, schools, pubs and accommodation buildings. We can assess buildings that are occupied, under construction or being refurbished.

If you are looking for a fire risk assessment to be carried out on your business, there are a number of factors that will affect the cost of this kind of assessment. These costs are usually related to the type of building and business you have and also the size of the business. We have put together a guide on the average costs of our fire risk assessments on the next page.
